INTRODUCTION.

OF the reigns of all the Sovereigns of England, that of Queen Elizabeth is undoubtedly the most momentous. The manners and customs, progresses and pageantry of that half century of English history; the remarkable men and women who lived in it; the continuous succession of eventful matters, not only of domestic, but political import, have caused the sovereignty of Elizabeth Tudor to be made the study of all classes of society, historians and critics. And certainly the most noteworthy incident, the most momentous event in the annals of a country, was the invasion of England by the Spanish Fleet in the year of our Lord, 1588. I do not pretend to write at large the history of the Rise and Fall of the Spanish Armada; but presume to give in as short an essay as possible, so complete a collection of notes upon the subject as could be gathered from the contemporary records of the period, now preserved in various depositories, especially our Public Record Office and the British Museum, where the Burleigh State Papers are to be seen. Yet, notwithstanding the large amount of valuable information we possess, I can but repeat the words of Sir Henry Ellis, the principal Librarian of the British Museum forty years ago—"There are many papers of high historical interest preserved in our manuscript repositories which have not yet seen the light of a later day to explain all the circumstances attending the formation and defeat of the Spanish Armada." The discoveries made by Motley, Froude and other historians of this century prove it; and, speaking generally, my own collection of MSS. has from time to time greatly assisted to settle many a curious genealogical puzzle of the Elizabethan era.

And here I cannot forbear calling attention to a very curious fact—the eventful periods in the history of England surrounding the year '88, from the time of William the Conqueror downwards. The Domesday Book was finished in A.D. 1086 or 1087, and just seven hundred years later it was being printed for the first time. The Conqueror's Charter to the Citizens of London, small as it is (and still preserved with jealous care by the Corporation) made all men law-worthy as in King Edward's days, and that each child should be his father's heir. William the Conqueror died in September, 1087. A century afterwards Henry Fitzalwyn, citizen and draper, and ancestor of the Earls of Abingdon, became the first Mayor (so called) of London, and served in office twenty-three years. Richard the First was crowned in September 1189, and both in that year and a century later the poor Jews were made to suffer terribly for conscience sake. In 1386—8 the rising of the Lords and the events of the time caused the English legislature to be called the Merciless Parliament. In August 1485, upon the death of Richard III., the Plantagenet race ended after a reign of three hundred years. History has fully recorded the Revolution of 1688 and the abdication of James II., while it must not be forgotten that the period 1786—93 was a most momentous one in the annals of the East India Company (founded soon after the Spanish Armada, in consequence of the riches discovered in the Eastern vessels captured), and that the question of a Regency through the first attack of insanity suffered by George III., and his sudden restoration to health made the thanksgiving service at St. Paul's as memorable as that upon the defeat of the Armada.

In the five years previous to the accession of Queen Elizabeth, the Roman Catholic religion, during the reign of her Sister Mary (who married Philip of Spain, the subsequent "hero" of the Armada Plot), had obtained remarkable ascendency. Whether King Philip deserved the Knighthood of the Garter or not, it is not for me to discuss here; but it is worth noting as a very suggestive fact that to this day his Armorial Shield surrounded by the cherished motto is to be seen beautifully painted in the window of the library at Lambeth Palace. From the day of Mary's death, King Philip had remained "a good Catholic," and he was smarting to revenge the persecutions by Henry VIII. and Edward VI. The affairs in the Low Countries, and the depredations on his shipping by the English, under "the flying devil," as Sir Francis Drake was called, the recent execution of Mary Queen of Scots, and the still increasing desire to destroy England's supremacy, and make himself (as he considered he ought to have been) the King of England, and dictator of the world, inspired him to devise the great Armada, which was at one blow to crush for ever the English nation and the Protestant religion. In this truly gigantic scheme he received from that holy man Pope Sextus V. all the assistance possible to be given by promises, blessings and papal bulls. The latter at once settled the matter, for they declared the Invasion no sin; that all men were from henceforth to be absolved from their oath of allegiance to the Queen of England, and that he who first took possession of our Island was to be the rightful occupier of the throne: that man of course was to be King Philip himself.

Queen Elizabeth however was a very different person to what Philip would have us believe. She was not going to give up the snug little island so easily. Previous to the Armada year she had received for some time much information relating to mysterious proceedings abroad, and though she affected to pay no attention, there is no doubt she thought a very great deal upon the subject. In May 1582 a Scottish Jesuit had been arrested, upon whom was found a paper written in Italian, referring to a proposed Invasion and the deposition of the Queen, and there is still preserved among the state papers* the Attorney General's own notes of the proposed Invasion, 1583. Then again Sir George Carey, the Governor of the Isle of Wight, wrote to Sir Francis Walsingham, the Secretary of State,* on the 30th January, 1583 (4) that he had received good advice from one Jacob Whiddon, the master of a ship just returned from Lisbon, a man "seeminge to be bothe sober, discrete and of reasonable judgement," that "greate ꝑparation be in hande for arminge a navie this sommer to the Sea ffive gallies to be upon the Stockes whereof one excedethe in bignes anie heretofore made by the halfe," and "that the Kinge determinethe in psonne to go this intended voyage wth an armie of manye thousandes of menne," the designe being "to accomplishe some acceptable service to God for Subv^{r}sion of religion in England, and that the plott was laid that all his Biscayens should lande at Milforde; the Kinge about Southehampton; the French Kinge at that instant to proclaime warre against us and to enter by Scotlande ioyninge with the Scottish forces to invade us." Sir George Carey concludes by begging that the information be received with secrecy, for if such "soddenne exploicte shoulde happenne I have not foure greate peeces mounted ne^{r} a forte or platteforme in state serviceable no^{r} goode powlder to mainteine shotte for one daies service," adding by way of sarcastic remark "Yf this place be of so smale importannce to be thought worthie of no better provision."

* S. P. Domestic Series, Eliz., Vol. 153, No. 79.

Now this letter is of the greatest historical importance, for it proves generally what really did take place four years afterwards —the actual invasion of England by an army of many thousands of men. The letter is dated from Carisbrooke Castle, in which (it will be remembered) sixty-four years afterwards Charles the First, King of England was himself a prisoner, and if coincidences are worth anything, the letter is dated the fatal 30th of January, upon which day sixty-five years later (1648—9) that misled monarch was beheaded at Whitehall!

Among the Records are preserved no less than twelve pages of the examination of four Spaniards in June 1585, to whom a dozen questions were put as to Philip's designs; and some six months later Lord Burghley sent to Walsingham certain details, among which was a charge upon ecclesiastics (Bishops, &c.) for the provision of Light Horse and Lancers, which he reckoned at £25 each, bringing a total of £8,275. This is interesting, showing that the Clergy were not exempt, and in 1588 they provided 559 horsemen and 3885 foot. In December 1585 one Walker Squior just returned from Lisbon to Dartmouth speaks of eighty sail of Hulks, of from 100 to 800 tons each; twenty Galleons of 300 to 500 tons; forty Biscay ships of 100 to 500 tons; with 30,000 Germans, 20,000 Italians (to be provided by the Pope), 5,000 Spaniards, and 7,000 Portuguese, all them getting ready for the Invasion of England.* Now this information was considered but an exaggerated idea of Philip's plans; however in March following there is the important correspondence of one of Walsingham's agents, Thomas Rogers (Nicholas Berden) which it is said formed the basis of England's future action. Among the proposals it was stated that if King Philip lent 10,000 crowns to the Duke of Guise, the latter would arm 800 French Footte and 200 horses, and that he would take the port of Weymouth, and keep it for his (Philip's) use.† A few months later, in a letter dated from Exeter, 14th December, 1586, Sir John Gilberte writes to Walsingham, that he has heard upon good authority that the King of Spain is preparing a fleet of ships with 60,000 soldiers "too have hys revenge apone Ingelande.‡

* S. P. dom. 167 (53).

With such evidence it is therefore quite clear that Philip had secretly, and for a long time previous to the actual invasion, made every preparation, and that all the resources of Spain, assisted by Portugal, Italy and Naples, were to be brought into use for the grand attack upon the little island of England. Of course Philip knew the characteristics of the English people. While he was thus preparing to crush us he proposed a conference, with a view of settlement of all disputes, in the Netherlands, and Queen Elizabeth either believed him, or feigned to do so; for such a conference took place between the two countries, and it may be said that both sides knew it was only that each might gain sufficient extra time to bring about more surely the Invasion and the defeat. Did we not know from other evidences the peculiarities of the Queen, and her extraordinary niggardness even in the hour of the greatest danger, we should be much inclined to wonder at a proceeding which might have brought about the wreck of her ships, the ruin of her fortresses, and the starvation of all her brave men. Subsequent events proved that had it not been for better generals than she — notwithstanding that she took upon herself the whole management, the book-keeping and counting-house work of this ever to be remembered and really leviathan defence of England, showing her to have been a woman of no ordinary character;—had it not been for the Lord Admiral Howard, for Drake and Raleigh, harassing from time to time the Spaniards even against the Queen's orders, there is every reason to believe that the Invasion would have taken place long before England was ready to defend herself.

In May, 1586, Drake had given "a cooling" to King Philip, by capturing 20 Spanish ships, with 250 brass pieces,* and in April, 1587, he tells us in a letter† still preserved, that at Calais on the 19th, "fynding divers huge shippes loden and to be loden with the King's ꝑrovision for England," he in his quiet business like way "burnt xxxij and sanke a greate argosie, and carried awaie fower w'th us"—sank two of the King's galleys, and repulsed the remainder "with verie little losse on our ptie," notwithstanding the heavy fire from the shore. The preparations of the King were greater than ever heard of before. Having "singed the King of Spain's beard" he braved Santa Cruz, the Spanish Admiral, to come out and fight, a challenge not readily accepted, for if any man had created a terror, both by sea and land, it was our Devonshire Drake, and the most remarkable part is that we have no record that all these exploits were done "by order"—in fact, it is believed to have been the reverse, for our official documents sadly prove the miserable condition our navy was in. It is certainly worth noting that in one of his captures (says Camden), of "a great and lusty ship, most rich and well furnished, called Saint Phillip, which was returning from the East Indies,"—the wealth found upon it gave a hint to the English which a few years later (in 1600), gave rise to the East India Company. Lord Burghley was continually lamenting, in his letters to Walsingham and in one dated Sept. 13, 1587 (even when the Armada would have been at our door, had not a mightier power than the Queen of England decreed otherwise), he speaks of the decay of the ships, the arrears of pay due to the men, and the troops a quarter of their real strength.

† Ibid. 200 (47).

From the Court at Richmond, 10th October, 1587, Burghley wrote to the Deputy Lieutenants of the Counties, informing them of "the great preparations now partlie made readie in Spaine for the furniture of a mightie armie with a nauie to come partilie to the seas," and desiring that all the musters should be in full strength and prepared; in November they were directed to have in readiness 20,000 footmen, 3,000 horsemen, and 1,000 pioneers, "for hir majties person;" and in January, Kent certified that that County was prepared with at least 12,654 men and 1,000 more from the Cinque ports. This proves how patriotic the people were at the hour of danger.

King Philip in the meantime had made all arrangements to sail. It is true there was already discontent in his forces at delay, while abroad—in Paris—one writer adds: "The Pope's signe hath brought into this country such sickness and dearth that I think the Kinge and all wishe him hanged." It was a misfortune to Philip that, just on the eve of sailing, his admiral Santa Cruz died, and the weather became very bad. Drake too had certainly weakened him, so that the Invasion promised in September or January was compelled to be postponed. Had not these circumstances intervened, not even the well known pluck of "a true born Englishman," would, I think, have saved England. This may be said to be theory, but our original records too truly prove that we were no more fit to meet an enemy then, or even three months later, thus making the history of this descent upon England more memorable than may be, at first supposed. And the great blame rested not on British valour, or the want of funds, but really on the Queen herself. I have in my own collection of MSS. a document illustrative of the period of the threatened invasion a few years later than that of the Armada. In it stores of immediate necessity to the amount of £1500 are shewn to have been cut down to just £760! Mr. Froude, severe as he is, only tells that truth which, until this century dawned, was an unknown virtue with the historians of the Spanish Armada.

Some of the ships of the period had worn well. There was Drake's "Fortunate Ship," the Elizabeth Bonaventure, which after 27 years' hard work, had run aground in March, 1587 (8), but still was unimpaired, causing the Lord Admiral to remark "except a ship had bene made of iron it were to be thought impossible to do as she hath done," an expression more of its capital build than the term iron, for now-a-days, our iron vessels instead of floating and lasting, turn up their toes suddenly and sink to the bottom of the sea, which "the wooden walls" of old England never did. What would Queen Elizabeth have thought of our ships now, when she considered hers to be expensive toys? Her Lord Admiral was clamouring, begging, praying, for the means of defence—ships, ammunition and provisions. "For the love of Jesus Christ, madam, awake," wrote he to her on the 2nd June, 1588. No wonder Froude writes: "She skipped, and joked, and wrangled over her money bags as if the Spanish Fleet was a dream and Philip fabulous as a wizard of romance." And when she did awake for a brief space, she simply allowed out a month's supply of stores—in fact, the brave men who were really risking their lives for England, were living at the rate of six men partaking of provisions only sufficient for four; sour beer and no ammunition to depend upon. The Lord Admiral himself actually paid out of his own pocket for the necessaries of existence for his men, because it was too much trouble for the Queen to write an order for them to be given out at the Tower. But history repeats itself, and our own Crimean experience shows how hard it is to learn wisdom.

Such was the state of affairs when the great and "Invincible Armada" was not only approaching, but actually in sight of England. Even Scotland, which probably, might be expected to have proved troublesome to us, seeing that Elizabeth had beheaded King James's mother only a few months previously, at last moved on the defensive. At a council in Holyrood House, May 7th, 1588, the king was informed* "how uthiris Princes and potentates in Europe haue putt thameselffs in armes within their kingdomes and dominions, having in reddynes grite and myehtie armeis preparit for sum grite purpois and exployte," whereupon it was proclaimed that all men between the ages of 16 and 60 were to be prepared at six hours warning to "ryse and marche," and other directions were issued in readiness for the defence of Scotland.

The magnitude of the Armada did not decrease by the intelligence of the day. In March, Howard wrote to Walsingham that the Spanish Fleet consisted of 210 sail and 36,000 soldiers; in May, Lord Seymour reported it to be 300 sail; next it was 130 sail of 57,868 tons burthen, 30,655 men, 2,080 galley slaves, 90 hangmen or executioners, 19 justices, and 2,360 pieces of ordnance. Then 132 sail of 59,120 tons burthen, 29,621 soldiers, 2,088 slaves, and finally, another report was 160 sail and 30,000 men. But probably, the correct estimate was 166 ships (all told), 27,128 Castilian and Portuguese soldiers, marines, and pioneers, and 180 friars. The flower of the nobility of the country were represented in the expedition. The King, in the place of Santa Cruz, who died, appointed the Duke of Medina Sidonia, Lord Admiral, and his correct title (Englished), is worth repeating, as some writers have mistaken another Duke Medina, for him: "Don Alonso Peres de Gusman, the Good Duke of the City of Medina Sidonia, Earl of Niobla, Marquis of Cacaca, in Africa, Lord of the City of St. Lucars, Captain General of the Ocean Sea, and the Coast of Andalusia, and the Riall Army and Host of His Majesty, and Knight of the famous order of the Golden Fleece." The orders he issued dated the 22nd May, 1588, and forty in number, are very curious and worthy of study, the first being the object of the invasion : "to serve God our Lord, and to bring again to his church and bosom many people and souls, which being oppressed by the hereticks and enemies of our Holy Catholick faith, they keep in subjection into their sects and unhappiness." *

With the expedition was brought a supply of provisions for six months, including biscuits, fish, rice, cocoa, wine, water, oil, candles, vinegar, etc. ; in fact, Drake estimated the quantity sufficent to keep 40,000 men a year. Twelve of the largest ships were named after the twelve apostles, a religious pass-word was given for each day of the week, and upon the standards were painted figures of Jesus Christ, our Lady, and the King of Spain.

To meet this force, the English fleet consisted of 195 ships (all told), and 15,334 men, of which only 61 ships and 7,901 men were in the direct pay of the Government for the month ending 25th August, 1588, being within the actual period of "Armada Service." The fleet was divided into three squadrons, under the command of Charles Howard, Baron of Effingham (afterwards created, in 1596, the first Earl of Nottingham, and High Steward of England, at the Coronation of James the First) as Lord High Admiral ; Lord Henry Seymour ; and Sir Francis Drake. But, large as the force appears, it really represented but half of war-ship standard. The majority were vessels supplied by various ports and places in England, to contribute which was in many instances a great hardship. The Governor of the Isle of Wight, declared there was no vessel belonging to that Island over 20 tons burthen, and Southampton, through the decay of the town and commerce, could not provide the two ships and pinnace asked for, and even if it could, it had not the men, for 110 had already been pressed in that place. Ipswich and Harwich would provide the two ships and pinnace, but desired the Government to provide the ordnance; Exeter, informing the Lord Treasurer of the ships being ready, state their cost to that city to be £1,000. The Cinque Ports fitted out six ships of 160 tons each, and six pinnaces of 30 tons, to attend upon them, "and among other service performed against the enemy, one of their ships, of Dover, the marines of which were well acquainted with the flats and banks of the Channel, decoyed the great Galleas of Spain and run her aground on the coast near Calais, and afterwards burnt her."*

The Lord Admiral's ship, "The Ark," carried 425 men; Lord Seymour's was "The Rainbow," and Sir Francis Drake's "The Revenge," each with 250 men. Among the other ships of the fleet were "The Triumph" (Sir Martin Frobisher, with 150 men)—"The Victory" (Sir John Hawkins, 400)—"The Lyon" (Lord Thomas Howard, 250)—"The Bonaventure" (Earl of Cumberland, 250,)—"The Dreadnought" (Sir George Beston, 200)—"The Vantguard" (Sir William Winter, 500). Among the merchant ships were the "Gallian Leycester" (George Fenner, 160)—"The Golden Noble" (Adam Seiger, 110)—"The Thomas Drake," and "The Elizabeth Drake," "The Hope Hawkins," "The Diamond," "The Heart's Ease," and "The Virgin, God save her." Among the London ships were "The Hercules," "The Royal Defence," "The Centurion," "The George Noble," "The Providence," and, what will please our American cousins, "The Mayflower" (of 200 tons, with 90 men, Captain Edward Banke), which was also the name of one of the coasters sent from King's Lynn, in Norfolk (150 tons, 70 men, Capt. Alexander Musgrave). Some of the other names are curious, for there was "The Foresight," "The Swiftsure," "The Hopewell," "The Delight," "The Makeshift," "The Bark Buggans," "The Gift of God," "The Vyneyard," "The Handmaid," "The Little Hare," "The Grace of God," "The Slyboot," and "The Heathen of Weymouth."

The land force was equally a weighty matter. Like the navy, the army had been quite a secondary consideration. The General Commander-in-Chief was the Queen's favourite, the Earl of Leicester, of whom Froude speaks :—"Drake's ability was as conspicuous as Leicester's imbecility," and it must be acknowledged that the Earl's ability had been proved wanting in the Netherlands. The English musters were ordered to be reported upon as early as 1584, and it may be a fact of some interest to note that Thomas Churchyard, the poet, was Muster Master for the County of Kent. The reports subsequently collected, shew there were 87,281 men in England, and 45,408 in Wales; in all, 132,689. This body was divided into three divisions, which specially included 22,000 foot and 2,000 horse, for the defence of London, under Leicester, at Tilbury; 28,900 under Lord Hunsdon; and 27,000 foot and 407 lances horse, and 1,961 light horse, as a reserve. Thus stood the force in June, 1588. On the 27th of that month 1,800 men were called out of Surrey. The Canterbury City records* give most interesting details of the Kentish preparations, and of the Camp at Northborne, near Deal. From that city went especially equipped, Alderman Brome at the head of 200 men; his namesake had done a similar service for Edward the Fourth, in 1470. We are told by Mr. Sheppard† that the repeated charges in the City accounts for "new heddyng of a drumme" shew but too well the zeal displayed in beating to arms. In Sussex enthusiasm was equally strong. One incident is worth recording: the old and infirm Viscount Montague collected together 200 horse, and marched at the head of them with his sons and child grandson, to offer his services to the Queen at Tilbury.‡ No wonder Her Majesty "finding him faithful, always loved him,"—although it must be acknowledged in a great many instances, Elizabeth proved herself forgetful of those who served her. In Norfolk, from May to September, 1588, the total cost for preparations amounted to £4,241, of which £2,272 was spent on 3,000 soldiers "appoynted for her Maj^{ties} guard to martch towards London."* The Lewes town books record that 42 barrels of gunpowder, 120 shot, 6 pieces of ordnance, match, etc., were delivered to that place, "of whiche 42 barrels of gunne powder there were delyuered unto the use of the Right Hon. Lord Buckhurste, 20 at the time that the Spanishe fleete came along by Newe Haven for my Lord Admirall ; and also one other barrell of the same 42 barrells of Gunpowder, was by a warrant directed unto the said constables from the Lord Buckhurste delyuered unto one, Patrick Hackett, for the use of the town of Brithhelmston." (Brighton).†

London naturally was fully alive to the danger from the earliest moment. The citizens from the most ancient times have always proved the best guardians of the Monarch and the People. And when the crown has failed in its duty, the loyal inhabitants who have been contemptuously called, by evil and jealous outsiders, "the shopkeepers of one square mile," have come forward and proved themselves ready to defend the rights and privileges of a great nation. "The firmly rooted tree of the British Constitution, beneath whose spacious branches repose and safety are now possible, was planted and watched and nurtured, by bold true Englishmen of former days. Personal, civil, and religious freedom, commercial greatness, social prosperity, cultivated intelligence, far-reaching philanthropy, vast moral influence, are the product of seeds planted long ago, and whose growth a benign Providence has fostered."‡ When therefore the Lords of the Council, in June, 1588, demanded of the citizens 10,000 men, the demand was immediately complied with. The Lord Mayor, further, called upon the City Companies, and the members put down their names for £54,000. The "Twelve" great Livery Guilds (among 219 members) alone subscribed £43,700, and among these the Ironmongers', to which I have the honour to belong, put down their names for £2,300. On the 3rd of April, the Corporation of London had resolved to fit out 16 of the largest ships and 4 pinnaces, and in July, it was reported that these 20 vessels (with 2,140 men), were costing the citizens £2,291 per month, yet they were willing to victual them one month longer. By that date we know the defeat of the Armada had been accomplished. Then again the Churchwardens' accounts of the different parishes in England give some interesting records. In London, those of St. Dunstan, Fleet Street, tells us, "Item paid for Papr, Einke, and Pennes, when the Alderman came to sesse men for armour, vd. Item paid for Gunpowder, xijd." St. Margaret's, Westminster, shew that parish particularly active in scouring its corslets and sharpening its steel; "payd at the mustering in Tutill fields, the xxj Aprill, for Powder, xxjlb., xxjs," and for 5 lbs of Match 20d." And what is particularly noteworthy: "for twoe prayere bookes when the Spanish fleete was upon the narrowe seas, iijd." Those interested in "The Marshalling of the Citie of London into a true forme of discipline," may see in the report of Edmunde Yorke, a commander in the Low Countries, many curious details.*

This tract on the marshalling, reminds us that the history of the trained bands of Old England forms a very interesting chapter in the annals of the country. The Honourable Artillery Company of the City of London was then, as now is, a force composed of citizens, "good and true," and we are told that many of the officers of the ancient corps were, at the time of the Armada, chosen to command in other parts of the kingdom, and that it was through their care and attention the trained bands in the provinces were so marshalled as to be a credit to the nation.† In the regiments from the counties sent to London, were many representatives of the first families in England, and of those who marched towards Tilbury was one man who was a namesake and one of the family of the future Lord Protector. This Oliver Cromwell, one of the Captains of the Huntingdon 400, was, it is true, not the General who, half a century later, was to make all England tremble (for the Protector was not born until 1599), but it is curious, never the less, that one of the name should be among the first to take up arms against Spain, in defence of our rights and privileges.

At last, on the 19th (29th N. S.), May, 1588, 129 vessels, carrying 19,295 soldiers, and 8,460 sailors, with slaves, and all other necessary belongings to the Spanish fleet, together with 2,431 pieces of ordnance, sailed gaily from Lisbon on its vaunted mission of Christianity (?) The Prince of Parma had promised to join the Invincibles with 35,000 men, but unfortunately for Spain, there was, from first to last, a Power greater than man who controlled matters, and this Power made itself felt in a very significant way. The Spanish Admiral was not used to the work he was appointed to oversee, the Prince of Parma did not, or could not, see his way clear to appear, while the wind and weather became so boisterous that the poor fleet suffered so severely as to be forced into the Groyne for repairs, and this causing a further delay of several weeks, prevented the Armada from reaching England at the time when England was not prepared to defend itself. We cannot get rid of such facts as original documents proclaim, and, I repeat, England had to thank a greater Power than the Queen for its preservation.

It was on the 12th (22) of July, that the Spaniards again sailed, and a week later the Armada was in the English Channel. Howard, Drake, and the others of our fleet, had been anxiously watching for the strangers. At last, says Camden, "they discovered the Spanish fleet, with lofty turret-like castles in front, like a half moon, the wings thereof spreading out about the length of seven miles, sailing very slowly with full sails, the wind being, as it were, overid with carrying them, and the ocean groaning under their weight." The Lords of the Council had written to the County Lieutenants that all troops under command should "be in readiness upon the fyeringe of the Beacons" to defend, and when the firing did take place, such a blaze along the English coast had never been seen before. "Myselfe can remember," writes an eye-witness, "when, upon the fyreing of the Beacons (whereby an alarum was given), the country people, forthwith, ranne downe to the seaside, some with clubs, some with picked staves and pitchforkes, all unarmed, and they that were best appoynted were but with a bill, a bow, and a sheafe of arrowes, no captaine or commander appoynted to direct, lead, or order them."* This explains the enthusiasm of the people, and it also truly shews "how dangerous it weare by tarrying to arme and put men in order, whereby their heat and fury might wax colde;" the old principle of defence. The general call to arms had sounded, and the troops marched towards the coast with a spirit "eager for the fray." Another eye-witness, no less a personage than John Stow, the honest historian of our London City, tells us:—"It was a pleasant sight to beholde the soldiers as they marched towards Tilbury, their cheerfull countenances, courageous words and gestures, dauncing and leaping, wheresoever they came, and in the campe their moste felicitie was hope of fight with y^{e} enemye."† Leicester, himself, wrote to Walsingham:—"the 4,000 men are all com together and lodged here, at West Tylberry . . . . . they be as forward men, and all wyllying to mete w^{t} the enemye as ever I saw," but their sudden call had prevented them bringing provisions, so that they were in a terrible plight—"there was not a barrell of bere nor a lofe of bredd for them after xx myles march." Such was the way we looked after our troops 300 years ago. And a proclamation actually had to be issued, limiting the prices of provisions,‡ for, as the demand increased, so increased the price! No wonder even Leicester wondered that the soldiers were not more discouraged, and that he stopped 1,000 more men coming from London, unless they brought with them their rations. It was something for Leicester to do, to beg that the kingdom might not be played away by delay, but this he really did.

Across the river Thames from Tilbury Fort to Gravesend, was thrown a chain and a bridge of boats, to prevent a passage up the river by the enemy, and to provide communication between Kent and Essex, for our troops. And here is another fact worth recording. Peter Pett, the Engineer, had an interview with Leicester about completing this very bridge, on the 22nd July, three days after the Armada had been seen in the Channel! A chart shewing the Thames between Lambeth and Tilbury Hope, is to be found in Robert Adam's 'Expeditionis Hispanorum in Angliam vera Descriptio,' 1588, a work which suggested those famous tapestries formerly in the House of Lords, and unfortunately destroyed when the Parliament Houses were burnt. These tapestries had been designed by Henry Cornelius Vroom, and executed by Francis Spering. In 1739 the Rev. Philip Morant, the Essex historian, described, and Pine illustrated, in an elegant folio volume, the ten pieces; in the preface to which is the foreboding, now of melancholy value: "as accident or moths may deface these valuable shadows, we have endeavoured to preserve their likeness in the preceding prints."

To this valuable record, to Froude, Motley and others of our modern historians who have carefully digested the State Papers, a reference must be made for a history of the fighting, and all the exciting incidents attending it. Suffice to say here that on the 21st (31) July the Lord Admiral had proclaimed war from his pinnace "The Defiance;" that Sir Francis Drake gave "a slap in the face" to the enemy, by not only taking a Spanish Galleon with all on board, including something like 50,000 ducats, but had actually captured Don Pedro de Valdez himself, "a man of great estimation with the King of Spayne, and thought next in his army to the Duke of Sidonia;" that fighting lasted on the 23rd July (August 2nd) from morning till night, when, says Camden, "there was never more lightening and thundering of the artillery than there was on both sides," and yet only one man was killed, on the side of the English, and he died "glorious" in his own barque in the midst of the enemy. The sharpest engagement took place on the 25th (August 4) in view of the Isle of Wight; the next day the Spaniards sailed up channel, hoping to meet Parma and his promised aid, but Lord Henry Seymour had already taken up a position to prevent Parma leaving his own country; and a few hours later the enemy anchored off Calais.

It was here in the darkness of the night, the English stratagem, which brought about the thorough rout of the Armada, was carried into effect. Some old and useless hulks were filled with inflammables, and being towed and drifted silently among the Spanish ships were suddenly fired. The result may be easily guessed; a panic ensued, orders to cut cables were sounded, and on the 28th July (August 7) out of 124 ships then anchored, only 86 could the next day be found,* the rest had vanished in different directions in dismay. Although not a new idea, this stratagem was certainly one of the best tactics adopted throughout the whole period of the Invasion, for during the excitement the English took the opportunity of "settling" one of the largest galleasses, in which its Commander Hugh de Moncado with 400 of his men perished, and 300 slaves jumping overboard were liberated; this was on the 29th July (August 8). The Spaniards, followed by the English, steered along the coast of Flanders, but the wrecks needed little following; their work was done; wind and weather were to do the rest.

Sir John Hawkins writing from on board the Victory, July 31st (August 10) gives us a summary of the fight: "Our ships, God be thanked, have received littell hurte," and that tells a remarkable tale. Sir John complains that the men of our fleet "have been long unpaid and need releefe." Drake wrote the same day to Walsingham: "There was never anything pleased me better than the seeing the enemy flying with a south wind to the northwards. God grant they have a good eye to the Duke of Parma, for with the grace of God, if we live, I doubt it not, but ere it be long so to handle the matter with the Duke of Sidonia as he shall wish himself at Saint Marie among his orange trees."† And Sir William Wynter writing the next day, August 1st (11), after declaring that their victuals on board ship were at an end, remarks, "the Duke would give his dukedom to be in Spain again!" That day, the Commanders of the English Fleet held a council, and they (the Lord Admiral Howard; George Clifford, third Earl of Cumberland; Lord Thomas Howard; Sir Francis Drake: Edmond, third Lord Sheffield; Sir John Hawkins; Sir Edward Hoby; and Vice Admiral Thomas Fenner) then and there declared their determination "to folowe and pursue the Spanishe fleete untill we have cleared our owne coaste and brought the Frithe west of us. And then to returne backe againe as well to revictuall oure ships (which stand in extreame scarcitie) as alsoe to guard and defende oure owne coaste at home, with further protestatione that if oure wantes of victualles and munitione were supplied we wold pursue them to the furthest."* This document is not only of interest, but important, for it proves how sadly deficient the fleet was in stores and provisions.

While all this was going on aboard ship, the army on land was mustering and marching towards the coast. On the 24th July (August 3) Leicester received his commission in command at Tilbury, and three days later he wrote to the Queen, proposing, that she on her way to Havering, should spend two or three days in "yo^{r} pore Lyvetenants Cabin," resting at Mr. Thomas Rich's house at Horndon, and so "make gladd many thousandes both here and not farr off." Accordingly on the 5th (15th) August, Her Majesty (not forgetting the princely pleasures of Kenilworth in 1575) once more favored her favourite, and as history tells us passed through the lines of troops at Tilbury on a white palfrey, addressing the soldiers with a true martial spirit. Here she dined with, and smiled upon those around her, and promised, no doubt, many a reward she soon forgot to bestow. Sir Edward Ratcliffe was one, and it was he who when subsequently jokingly asked by the Queen what a man thought of when thinking of nothing, replied with all humility: "Madam, he thinks of a woman's promise!" To Tilbury came Robert Carey and the Earl of Cumberland, to bring the Queen news of the Armada's defeat, so that it is a remarkable fact, illustrative of the times and the general order of things, that at the very time Her Majesty was addressing the troops, and cheering them on to victory, the Invincible

Armada had been defeated at least a week, not one hundred miles from where she was, and some of the English vessels had already returned home !

The fate of the Armada is recorded in history. On St. Lawrence's day July 30th (August 9), Philip the Second was destined to know the Saints had deserted his cause, notwithstanding the blessings of the Pope. And still more curious is it to record that in all the fighting, while amunition and provisions had been expended on both sides, until each fleet had not sufficient powder to fight another day,* yet Providence ruled the destinies of each, as to bring about a cessation at so opportune a moment, that while at least 10,000 men had been killed on the Spanish side, not one hundred Englishmen had been slain. When Howard left the enemy going north there were, or should have been, at least 120 sail. Sir George Carey on the 22nd August (September 1) reports one hundred big vessels then steering between the Orkneys and Fair Island, beat about by the winds; but a fortnight later only fifty-two of these had escaped destruction through the weather, winds and rocks. In the fighting of July and August fifteen ships and 4,791 men were reported lost; in September on the coast of Ireland seventeen ships and 5,394 men perished by the tempest,† so that if these returns are correct, thirty-two ships and 10,185 men perished in this expedition. Of seventy other ships nothing more was heard; one of the largest galleons on the Irish coast begged for water, although it had twenty-five pipes of wine on board. "Our Lady of the Rosary," a fine ship with 700 hands, had lost 500: and those that survived in great want, were Spanish gentry born; but soon afterwards the vessel struck the breakers of the Blasket Island, and the pilot's son alone was saved. In another case, a butt of wine was offered for a cask of water, and that not being obtained, even the ship itself; but the Irish were too much afraid of the gallows to accept the tempting bait, and so the vessel foundered, and of the crew, all that survived were taken prisoners. Two other big ships were seen off the Isle of Arran, but one of these suddenly disappeared, and the other became a prize for the Mayor of Galway. The remnants of the proud Armada in passing round by Scotland presented a most dismal spectacle. On the strand at Sligo, wrote Secretary Fenton to Lord Burleigh, October 28th, there were to be seen in a five-mile walk 1,100 dead bodies washed up by the sea.* Of the officers wrecked Don Lewis of Cordova alone escaped, being sent to England. It was long reported, even believed to this day by the residents, that the great Duke of Medina himself had been wrecked on the Fair Island,† and was never more seen in Spain; but this was really only a superstition, for both Mr. Froude and Mr. Motley have proved by the Spanish records that the Duke had returned home in September 1588, and soon retired a disgraced and disgusted man to his own quiet estate.

But the foundering of so many Spanish vessels with the fabulous treasures on board, led to much speculation in after years. Between 1641 and 1694 the records of the Argyll family‡ shew that the Marquis had obtained a grant from Charles I. to search for the "Admiral of Florence" ship of fifty-six guns with thirty millions of money on board, wrecked on the coast of Mull, but in 1677 after a long search, all that was found were a few odd things, such as kettles, &c., and copper just sufficient to pay the cost of the search! This reminds me of a more modern venture. In 1869 a limited liability Company was started in London, with a capital of £100,000, to recover the vast treasures from the Galleons sunk in the Harbour of Vigo in the Spanish War of Succession, 1700, and supposed to contain fourteen millions of Eights. In 1873 the expedition returned to Havre, the apparatus, cranes, &c., on board comprising, I understand, the sole assets of the company.

When the news of the defeat of the Armada reached Rome, the wits spared not the actors in it. An unofficial proclamation was issued in these words :—"The Pope from the plenitude of his power will grant indulgences for 1000 years, if any one will inform him with certainty what is become of the Spanish Fleet; where it is gone; whether it be taken up to Heaven; sunk down into Tartarus; suspended somewhere in the air; or floating upon some sea." Lord Bacon, in 1624, did not fail to ridicule it, and at the present day the only relics we have of the Invincibles and their treasures are the "curiosities" in the Tower of London—the lances which were brought over "to bleed us with;" the peculiar instrument called the Ranceur, in which is a pike intended "to pick the roast beef out of the Englishman's teeth;" the collar of torment; and a few other similar pretty little toys which were intended to amuse and convert us.

‡ Hist. MS., VI.

The defeat of the Armada was the subject of no end of literature, as the Register Books at Stationer's Hall duly chronicle. Songs, ballads, psalms, and verses were the order of the day. There was one curious sheet printed off in various languages, a copy of which is still preserved among the Cottonian MS.* But perhaps the most curious is the "long and crafty" letter of thirty leaves, which Lord Burghley addressed to the Spanish Ambassador in France, in which he detailed, in the assumed character of a papist in England, the lamentable defeat.† Then again pictures and medals appeared to suit the people and the times; subsequently illustrated Armada playing cards were invented "to keep the memory green,"‡ and such entries were made in the parish registers, as may be seen in those at Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight. Then again paintings were introduced; as those in Gaywood Church, Norfolk; All Saints', Hastings; and Beddington Hall;§ but probably the most interesting memorial is that in St. Helen's Church, Bishopsgate, in the City of London—it is a monument erected to the memory of Martin Bond, the son of the celebrated Alderman Bond, so well known for his Eastern trading ships, and one of the Royal Commissioners. The inscription tells us that Martin Bond "was Captaine in ye yeare 1588 at ye campe at Tilbury, and after remained Chief Captaine of ye trained bands of this Citty untill his death,"—in 1643, aged 85. He was a member of the Haberdashers' Company, who recently restored the monument, which curiously represents the Captain seated in a tent at the camp; two sentinels are in front, and at the side is a page holding a horse, while in the rear are other tents. To this day in various places in England, sermons are annually preached by virtue of bequests left for the special purpose "of expressing thankfulness to God for his mercifull deliverance of this kingdom in the year of our lord God 1588 from the Spanish Armada," and also deliverance from the Gunpowder Plot Conspirators of 1605.*

The Public Thanksgiving at St. Paul's must not be forgotten. Her Majesty surrounded by her Court proceeded in state from Somerset House in the Strand, through Temple Bar,† over the gates of which were placed the City Waits, and at the entrance stood the Lord Mayor with the Sceptre, which he presented to the Queen, and she returned it to him as she considered it could not be in better custody, and so through lines of the trained bands and the Livery of London to the Cathedral. This was on the 24th November, 1588, when the Bishop of Sarum preached from Paul's Cross, then standing at the north-east corner of the present cathedral. The books of the various City Companies show the great preparations made upon the occasion. The Stationers' (Francis Coldocke and Henry Denham, being then Wardens) not only record the repair of the pavements at the West end of the Church, but also "for preparacōn of standinge and for fflagges and other necessaryes," as also "for twoo severall dynners,"‡ showing what a time of festivity it was. The Churchwardens' books of the various parishes likewise recorded the ringing of the bells, and refreshment to the ringers. At St. Margaret's Westminster, two shillings were paid (which was twelve pence more than was "payde for ringinge at the beheadinge of the Quene of Scots," although the very next entry in the books of that event has the somewhat suggestive item "for mending of the ropes iiij$^{d.}$" leaving ignorant people to suppose that the ringers in their joy had not too softly pulled the ropes). At St. Dunstan's in the West (in which parish Temple Bar stands), the ringers not only rang merry peals, but they and their "bread and drynke" cost the large sum of five shillings; at St. Michael's, Cornhill, "iiij torches and iiij lynckes on the Queenes nighte" cost five shillings and four pence; but at St. Lawrence, Pountney, they rejoiced in another way, for four preachers received twenty shillings. Outside London, in the provinces the records also speak of the enthusiasm. The thanksgiving day at Chester was celebrated on the 19th, by a sermon at the Cathedral, "all shoppes, tavernes and typlynge houses being shutte up all that day leste through anye worldlye occasyion those who were not fully grounded in good heale myght withdrawe themselves from that most godly actyon," and at Shrewsbury "all people that daye kept it holy unto the Lord that had given her majestye sutche Victorie."

The Queen's procession to St. Paul's is shewn as a head-piece to the Stationers' Almanack for 1760. Another joyful celebration was the Lord Mayor's pageant (Sir Martyn Calthrop being Mayor), October 29th. The printed copy was registered at Stationers' Hall, but not one is now known to be in existence. The banners taken from the Armada, and sent by the Lord Admiral to Walsingham on the 25th August, were displayed at Paul's Cross on the 8th of September following, and the next day on London Bridge—the very same day that the Mayor and seven Aldermen of Bristol signed and sent off to Lord Burghley a letter informing him he had been elected High Steward of that City in the room of the late Earl of Leicester.*

* Lansdowne MS. 56 (202). Leicester did not long survive his Tilbury

The animosities against the Spaniards did not cease with the death of Philip the Second in 1598. The Ambassador in London had a hard time of it, and every opportunity was taken to insult or injure him. In 1618 and 1621 Gondomar, the then representative, was the cause of serious riots. In the former year the Ambassador having ridden over a little boy, the mob proceeded to his house in Barbican,* and would soon have wrecked it, had not the Lord Mayor and Chief Justice Mountague arrived upon the scene. The curious part of the matter is, King James I. compelled the Lord Mayor to beg Gondomar's pardon, while seven boys were sentenced to pay £500 each, and suffer six months' imprisonment; but they were subsequently pardoned.

Having in as concise a form as possible, summarised the documentary evidence upon the rise and fall of the Spanish Armada, I shall now say a few words about the very interesting and valuable List of Names reprinted from the scarce quarto tract of 1798, issued by "Leigh and Sotheby, York Street, Covent Garden," a copy of which, having the Rev. Samuel Lyson's notes, is in my Collection. The original MS. cannot be found; the author or editor of it is unknown, but Mr. John Bruce of the State Paper Office, who in May 1798 compiled for the private use of the Privy Council a "Report on the arrangements which were made for the internal defence of these kingdoms when Spain by its Armada proposed the Invasion and Conquest of England," (a copy of which most valuable report, with special dedication, notes, and signed by Bruce, is also in my Collection), tells us that "from the names and orthography, the MS., which I have not seen, is probably authentic." I shall presently prove it is so without doubt.

exertions; he died Sept. 4th. His "last letter" to the Queen is in S. P. Dom. 215 (65).

* I have in my MS. Collection the original Mortgage from Lord Willoughby d'Eresby to Sir Charles Mountague of this very house, then called "Willughbie House als the Barbican als Basecourte," in which is recited the lease to the Spanish Ambassador, for seven years, from 11th October, 1612, at a rent of £180 per annum, showing it to have been a good sized mansion.

Here, I cannot refrain from quoting Mr. Bruce's remarks upon the loss of the MS. He says: "It is one among many similar proofs of the losses to which the King's Archives have been exposed from the want of the strict regulations under which they ought to have been originally placed." All those persons, like myself, who have daily to search among the records and registers will quite agree with Mr. Bruce, and I for one have cause continually to lament the careless manner in which the musty old deeds and priceless documents, so valuable to our history generally, and so indispensable to genealogical enquiry, have been guarded by their proper custodians. From the Muniment room of the family mansion, or the "rubbish" shed of some public institution to the waste-paper shop, or the butterman's store, seems to have been but a step.* Some of my own Collections (Pedigrees, Court Rolls, and official documents of all kinds, and of inestimable value) have been rescued by me from such sources, so I can speak with feeling in the cause. Specimens of some I have already published for the benefit of mankind at large, and I yet hope to do a further service in this direction; but one of the documents I have I cannot refrain from mentioning in this place—it is the original Will of the first and last Earl of Cleveland, never proved, but which explains one of the most important mysteries in the Wentworth Pedigree, as I was assured years ago by the late Col. Chester, LL.D., who some time previously had compiled a Wentworth genealogy. I may also mention that I have an official document proving that Lord Macaulay, although he was given permission by the Corporation in 1855, to inspect the records of the City of London, never did so. Why, is to me a mystery, seeing that the treasures at

* I would specially refer to the Cottonian and Harley MSS. in the British Museum, the Magna Charta, &c. It may not be generally known that the valuable collection of "Cæsar Papers" were rescued by Patterson the Auctioneer from a butter shop, and were subsequently sold by him in 187 lots, at the St. Paul's Coffee house, St. Paul's Churchyard, December, 1757, for £356 0s. 6d.—the majority of the volumes being sold at a few shillings each!

Guildhall would have caused him to have wonderfully altered some of his opinions too carelessly expressed in his otherwise valuable History.

Notwithstanding the extraordinary conduct of Queen Elizabeth in her management of affairs during the eventful period of the Armada Invasion, and how miserly she controlled necessary expenditure, the debts of the country had increased to an alarming extent. From the 22nd December, 1587, to the 15th September, 1588, the estimated wages of the navy amounted to £45,857; and from Michaelmas 1587 to Lady-day 1588 the preparation and victualling of the ships amounted to £96,770, so that the total cost may be estimated at nearly £150,000, quite irrespective of furniture and fittings, as also of those vessels supplied by the different places in England. On the 9th August, 1588, there were under the control of the Lord Admiral and Lord Seymour, 119 sail, and 11,120 men.

To meet these and other charges, it was necessary to raise money quite independent of the subsidies or taxes, for it must be presumed, seeing the overwhelming evidence existing among the State Papers, that Imperial Taxation, then as now, was no easy burthen to the English ratepayer. Besides this there was the expense of the Army. While Admiral Howard was bitterly lamenting that the Queen had done her best to starve the seamen, and Hawkins wrote that there were actually due to the seamen for wages £19,000 in arrears, the Lords of the Council had written to the various Lieutenants of the Counties, saying there was a report that the men of the army had been unpaid for some time, the officers receiving the wages from the day of camping to the dissolution. Burleigh too was terribly hampered, for, until he could obtain permission from the Queen, he was quite unable to send even the £8,000 immediately required, notwithstanding that he bore the title of England's Lord Treasurer.

Large subsidies had already been granted. In May, 1588, there was due, upon an assessment of £108,350, some £36,000. Sir Christopher Hatton had acquainted Parliament, on the 22nd February, of the need of help, and it was then that a committee was appointed to raise the money. Among Lord Burghley's papers* is a draught of "ye preamble for ye subsidy," a twelvemonth later, and this document is interesting, because it bears the Lord Treasurer's autograph corrections. In it we are told : "Wee do further consider how for ye accomplishing of these yr honorable and princely actions, ye greate and infinite charges yor Matie hath sustained, and yt especially ye last yeare, in preparing and maintening so long time so puisant an army by sea, besides ye forces assembled by land, for ye wthstanding of ye two great and mighty armies prepared, ye one in ye Low Countries ready to pass ye seas unto this realme under ye Duke of Parma, and ye other brought forth out of Spain under ye Duke of Medina wth intent by their mighty joint forces, far exceeding all others in any memory of man to have made a full bloody conquest of this realme, had not ye same been prevented through ye singular, yea miraculous goodness of Almighty God and yr Highness's said great preparations and forces."

To make an extraordinary subsidy, and so ruin the nation at one stroke, to meet the cost of the defence made against the Invasion, was too much even for Queen Elizabeth, so she adopted a wiser and less repulsive course, she borrowed, by way of loan, of the 2,416 of her subjects, as set forth in the printed list, out of the 36 counties in England, a sum approaching £75,000 ; an amount, at that date, very considerable, and especially so after the extraordinary charges each county had already borne in making other provision. Now, it will be noticed that the list does not mention the year this money was paid, although the dates of payment ranged from the 4th February to the following December ; but I will show the date to be 1589, and that the amount was raised to meet the arrears, then due for the charges of the year previous. The too brief "introduction" to the printed list of 1798, simply tells us that letters were sent by the Queen to Sir Francis Walsingham, keeper of the Privy Seal, and by him directed to the Lieutenants of the various counties, requiring the raising of the loan. This was the truth, for a copy of one of these Privy Seals I now print, and it will not only show the proceedings adopted, but prove, in every way, that the list is genuine.[*]

Now a reference to the list of contributions from Shropshire, will show that Thomas Lawley paid the £25 on the 19th April, and upon the document is a receipt signed by "E. Leighton," so dated, and a further note endorsed : "Salopp, Quinto Maii, 1590. Repayed unto his assignes by Killigrew."

Another proof of the authenticity of the list will be found among Lord Burghley's papers in the British Museum.* It is endorsed : "a note of all the Prvie seales sentdowne in the begynnynge of Mche, 1588."—Lincolnshire. In this document there are 129 names ; in the printed list only 115, the fourteen excluded having a memorandum against them, such as "insufficient," "discharged," or (as in the case of "George Berry, of Carlesby") "discharged by lrẽs frõ my Lõ Tresor." The 115 names, with the amounts against each agree with the printed list, except in some instances as to spelling, which must be considered excusable at that date, seeing how often in important documents, such as wills, the name of the testator, will be found written in several ways.

The third proof is an original memorial to Secretary Wolly, in April, 1589, from one Matthew Chubb, of Dorchester, who will be found in the list of the county of Dorset, as being charged with £50 the 29th March. He prays an excuse for paying by reason that "neither the Lord Leutenant nor the Deputie Leutenants have certified the sufficiencie of yo^{r} suppliant to be able to lend her ma^{tie} anie some of money."* This shews that it was a practice to charge individuals of supposed means without asking, and chance whether they paid or not.

* Lansdowne MS. 81 (141).

During the months of May, June, and July, the Privy Council were continually sending letters to the collectors, requesting all arrears to be paid up. In Surrey £500 out of £2,000 remained unpaid, and, in one instance, on July 16th, 1589, it was argued that the great losses of sheep, cattle, and corn, had impoverished the would-be contributors.† From thirty counties, at the date ending June, £46,925 had been received. Among those who were proposed to be charged, were, gentlemen of the court, law, and crown; and lists of these are still preserved. Among those belonging to the King's Bench were seven officers and forty "fillizers and attornies," and in the list signed by Sir Christopher Wray, the Chief Justice, I find the first attorney named, to be none other than Miles Doddinge, so well known from the grants he had of "concealed lands." In another document we are told: "Sir James Harrington, Knight, collector for countie of Rutland, both paid only £275 of the £500 imposed upon that countie, whereof £100 assessed upon himself is also unpaide, being ꝑcall of the £500," and a reference to the list will show that Rutland is assessed at £375. Gloucester was originally assessed at £4,000, but paid £2,475 "in respect of the povertie in the countrey by the murreyn of cattell, the rot of sheepe, and lacke of rent for cloth and corne." Buckingham was assessed at £3,000, but paid only £1,427. Somerset assessed at the like sum, paid £2,300, "for that many trayned souldiers and others being charged the last yeare were charged with this loane." In Lincoln: "Sir Anthony Thorold hath also signified that divers persons refuse to paye." Norfolk assessed at £5,000, only remitted to the collector £3,380. In fact, in a great number of cases the cry from those assessed was the answer flatly refusing, as "the lieutenants have not any commission to warrant them doing in this behalfe." In one case the individual assessed prayed that two persons should be joined for the payment of the £25 named.

† Molyneux Papers, Hist. MS., vii. (647).

It will be seen, by these proofs that the list, reprinted from the scarce 4to copy of 1798, is genuine, notwithstanding that the original, from which it was transcribed, cannot now be found. It is probably owing to this fact that those unused to the searching of records have, hitherto, given the useful printed copy a bad name, which I have now done my best to prove groundless. One of the reasons given for doubting it, was that the City of London is not mentioned in it, but this I explain: that the city contribution formed quite a distinct loan; it subscribed amongst the citizens belonging to the livery companies, no less than £54,000, or more than two-thirds of the whole amount all England is shewn to have paid, and a Bond given by Queen Elizabeth to the Corporation for £30,000 is still extant. If another edition of this work is called for, I shall be inclined to include in it the city list, and add such other facts that want of space alone now prevents me printing.

I must now mention that Queen Elizabeth, being determined to retaliate upon the Spaniards, and not wait for another Invasion from them, but really, to invade the territory of King Philip instead, issued her commission to Sir John Norris and Sir Francis Drake, early in 1589, and in the instructions were included the appointment of Sir Roger Williams and Thomas Fenner, in the room of Norris or Drake, if either should die. And by her letter, dated Somerset House, 21 November, 1590, she asked for another loan. This list is extant; it is equally extensive, and valuable, and may be included in my next edition (together with much interesting information relating to it, preserved among the city archives), as a centenary volume some years hence.

In conclusion, I have only to add that the documents quoted from have been examined, and this has proved no ordinary labour, and but for valuable assistance rendered by my brother, Mr. W. F. Noble, of Forest Hill Road, London, S.E., the work could not have been accomplished so satisfactorily as it is—the principal object in view being at the present time not only to write an Historical Essay upon the rise and fall of the Armada, but also to prove that the printed list is genuine, and consequently of the greatest value to genealogists and county historians, while the Index will be found not only useful, but certainly an indispensable feature in the present publication.
